This short editorial has one main purpose: to thank the many people who contributed to this issue. Considerable time and thought has gone into every article here; these authors made it possible.

Barbara Benary and Tomoko Deguchi undertook a long and complex journey to gather the material about gamelan in Japan. They documented groups, and, perhaps even more important, made personal contacts and forged new and lasting friendships in the process.

The opening paragraphs of Ruby Ornstein’s article are an insightful perspective of the history of field work. This serves as a preface to two versions of a document by I Gusti Nyoman Bagus Pandji, in which he inventories and explains the variety of “gamelan” ensembles in his own “motherland” of Bali.

Irawati Durban is known by many from her extensive international teaching and performing. Her experience as a dancer, choreographer, and observer of the arts informs her account of the introduction and rejuvenation of the Sundanese dance form known as Jaipongan.

Hardjo Susilo was the first Javanese gamelan teacher in the United States. It would be impossible to count how many students he has taught and influenced in over five decades of teaching, performing, and advising. His memoir starts with his childhood in Java; and there is no end in sight for his continuing love of gamelan.

Several articles mention the “gamelan listserv” or the “gamelan list.” Ruby Ornstein recalls “The announcement of Pandji’s death on the Gamelan Listserv prompted a stream of personal reminiscences…”

Owing to the creation of a gamelan list-serve on the Internet, it is difficult to find a subject which has not already been discussed through e-mail.”

Surely the conversation is far from over.

BALUNGAN is an international journal that presents both scholarly and artistic perspectives on Indonesian and international gamelan music and related performing arts. The first issue of BALUNGAN was printed in 1984; this is the sixteenth.

The American Gamelan Institute (AGI) was founded in 1981 to publish, record, distribute, and make available information on all aspects of Indonesian performing arts and their international counterparts. AGI maintains an online library with fonts, scores, and writings that may be freely downloaded for educational use. AGI also produces “Gongcast,” a podcast of all forms of gamelan; previous programs are on iTunes and the AGI web site.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Institutional subscriptions are $100 per year for an unlimited site license to the online edition, as well as a print copy of each new issue. Subscriptions and back issues may be purchased directly from AGI, or from a library subscription service.

Individuals subscribing to the print edition are asked to make a $25 contribution to subsidize the expense of providing complimentary issues to Indonesian institutions and artists.

SUBMISSIONS

Print or multi-media may be submitted for either the print and online editions of BALUNGAN. Scores or writings that are not published can be entered into the AGI catalog, or made available in the AGI online library. All materials are distributed only with permission from the author. Please email agi@gamelan.org for more information.

The web site of the American Gamelan Institute is www.gamelan.org. Current and back issues of BALUNGAN, including video and audio files are at www.gamelan.org/balungan.

BALUNGAN (ISSN# 0885-7113) is a publication of the American Gamelan Institute.
